PROFILE: Having graduated from the School of Law and Government, DCU, with a PhD in March 2005, I am currently working as a lecturer in International Political Economy, Comparative Politics and Irish Politics in the Dublin Institute of Technology.

I am able to work on my own initiative or as part of a team, having collaborated extensively with colleagues in the DIT, other Irish universities and many institutions abroad. I have a proven track record in research, publication, and teaching, and am dedicated to maintaining high standards in all three areas.

I have won three IRCHSS research fellowships (total value €175,000), having been a graduate, doctoral and postdoctoral IRCHSS research fellow. I am currently part of an international collaborative research project, funded by the Canadian Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC) under a partnership development grant, valued at $200,000.

I have conducted two postdoctoral research projects, and hold membership in the Political Studies Association of Ireland, the Political Studies Association (UK), and the American Political Science Association and the Midwest Political Studies Association. I was chair of the Comparative Policy Section of the MPSA from 2016-2018. I am also a co-founder and co-director of the Business, Society and Sustainability Research Centre in the College of Business, DIT.

I have consulted with and advised the Irish, Czech, UK, EU and Scottish, governments on issues surrounding lobbying, its regulation and matters to do with transparency, accountability and ethics in government. With my research collaborators, I have appeared before various committee of these governments. From 2011 to 2015 I worked closely with civil servants in the Department of Public Expenditure and Reform on the development of the government's Regulation of Lobbying Act (2015).

I am lead editor of the volume Irish Business and Society (2010) which examined the politics and economics of contemporary Ireland. I am a founding director of the DIT Business, Society and Sustainability Research Centre in the College of Business. I am a co-author of Regulation Lobbying: A Global Comparison (1st and 2nd editions) and I am also lead editor of the volumes Policy Paradigm in Theory and Practice and Approaches to Qualitative Research: A Guide for Dissertation Students.

I research public policy and its impact upon business and society (theory and practice) and also focus on lobbying policy development and implementation.

I teach courses in Irish Business and Society, International Political Economy and Irish politics in the DIT. I previously taught American Politics in the School of Law and Government in DCU from 2001 to 2008.

SELECTED GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

RESEARCH MANAGEMENT EXPERIENCE: 1999-2018

- ◆ Director of the DIT Research Centre for Business, Society and Sustainability (2010-).
I am a founding director of this centre. This is the only research centre in the College of Business, DIT, and as such is central to the college's recruitment of research students. In the centre MA and PhD research students present their research findings, as do DIT staff and colleagues from other universities in Ireland and overseas. In a regular year we would have up to 30 research seminars. The experience of managing this centre has been invaluable in terms of gaining research management experience. The centre itself benefits all involved, as it allows for synergies to develop both within the college and with other colleges across Ireland and the world. It has been great experience running this centre.
- ◆ Research project management conducted in three main streams (2005-2018).
Firstly, managing a research project on global lobbying regulations (2005-2007). As a postdoctoral researcher in the Department of Political Science in Trinity College Dublin, I researched global lobbying regulations in a project funded by the Department of the Environment, Heritage & Local Government. The findings from this research were submitted to the government in 2007 as a report on lessons from global lobbying regulations. My colleagues and I subsequently turned this research project into what became the book Regulating Lobbying: A Global Comparison, 1st ed in 2010.

Secondly, managing research on global lobbying regulations (2009-2012) – funded by an IRCHSS Strand 1 Research Award. This project was funded by €90,000 from the IRCHSS. I worked on this project as the research director/coordinator and managed the work of the two research assistants we hired for the project. The project involved sending out over 20,000 questionnaires along with conducting over 100 interviews with politicians, lobbyists and regulators in countries across the world from the US to Australia. We have published a range of papers and book chapters from this research project, along with producing 10 separate sets of evidence submissions to various government.

Thirdly, managing and directing research on understating policy change at times of economic crisis in various countries across the world (2005-2018). This research has resulted in the publication of 2 books, 3 book chapters, and 16 academic peer reviewed journal articles, along with numerous conference papers presented in Europe, and North America. In that time I have also chaired panels on this topic at all of the major political science conferences from APSA, and the MPSA to the ICPP. Between 2016 and 2018 I was also chair of the Comparative Policy Section of the MPSA in the US.

Postdoctoral Research

- ◆ Postdoctoral researcher, Department of Political Science, Trinity College Dublin, (June 2005 – June 2006). This research, funded by the Department of the Environment, Heritage & Local Government, sought to discover if lobbying regulations should be introduced here.
- ◆ Postdoctoral researcher, School of Law and Government, DCU, (January 2005 – June 2005). This research examined regimes across the world to discover which could be classified as semi-presidential.
- ◆ Postdoctoral research with Mr. Des Moore, Head of School of Business and Humanities, Institute of Technology Blanchardstown, (January – September 2005). This research was conducted for the ESB.

Doctoral Research

- ◆ The Critical Junctures Approach Remoulded: Explaining Change in Trade Union Influence Over Public Policy in Four Countries. This IRCHSS PhD scholarship supported thesis improved understanding of the critical junctures concept through a comparative analysis of change in trade union peak organisations' influence over public policy.
- ◆ Masters research. This IRCHSS Masters scholarship supported thesis examined the evolution of a trade union from 1670 to 1921. It uncovered a previously, and universally, discounted link between the ancient guilds of Dublin and the later trade unions.
- ◆ Research Associate for Doctor Eileen Connolly, School of Law and Government, DCU, (October 1999 – October 2002) on the state of the social partnership in Ireland, funded by the Department of the Taoiseach.
